Reading Assignments: For each class meeting, students will have material to read, some to be done before class and some during class. Written commentary on assigned readings, called “responses” are part of each reading assignment done outside of class. These responses will be used for class discussion of the reading assigned and may be collected for credit. Out of class responses must be typed in MLA format with citing as needed. Please review Responses handout link on main class page for guidelines.

Peer Review/Editing: Students will be required to share a fairly complete draft of all of the major essays before the final draft is due or at any other assigned time. These drafts will be read by other students and so must be readable and typed. Specific editing forms will be used to guide student feed-back. There are no make-ups for missing peer review sessions.

Packets for main graded essays: Final drafts must have a thematic title, and in the top left corner of the page must be the student's name, date, course information and assignment name. Please staple the required parts as a packet before class with final draft on top, then the working draft, and any other required parts underneath. (in-attention to this format will earn points off...). Each final draft packet of a graded essay must have a Process Writing at the end that tracks the process/experience of writing the paper. Packets must be turned in, in a 9x12 manila envelope with student's name and course data and assignment enclosed printed clearly in the upper left of the address side. Packet content link is on main class page. A digital version of the final draft may also be required as an email attachment (or via Canvas upload, as indicated) from student's COCC mail account.

MLA Formatting: All out of class writing tasks must be submitted using MLA format – typed, double-spaced, 12- point Times New Roman (or Arial). See samples on the OWL web site or our writing handbook for a current guide (or the templates on the class page) for this MLA-formatting, including use of a header to be sure each page contains student's name and page number. In addition, MLA crediting of any ideas/information other than the student's own views/thinking will avoid plagiarism and insure academic, legal and personal integrity (see below for more on plagiarism issues). Please note: Be sure to keep back-up files on a removable disk (cd or flash-drive) of ALL work turned in for a grade and keep a photocopy of essay packets containing hand-written material.

Attendance and Participation We will use small group workshops as a major component of teaching and learning writing, so attendance is mandatory. Students must, also, take responsibility for their own learning by asking questions, doing extra reading, etc. as needed to enhance their understanding. Students who cannot attend a class, must notify the instructor by email before class time and arrange with another student in class to take notes. Missing more than 15 minutes of class without arrangement will count as an absence. More than 2 unexcused absences will threaten the course grade. The instructor is not obligated to recount in detail what was covered in class for an absent student. The Canvas class site and the open internet class page will have course materials, general assignments, etc. for access from any internet computer. But adjustments to in-class activities or coverage of material may be made that do not conform exactly to the day's assignment schedule.

SPECIAL WEATHER/COLLEGE CLOSURE POLICIES: If a situation requires class to be cancelled, students must keep up with class assignments on the assignments web page. If assignments are due on a cancelled class day, students can email them to jthielsen@cocc.edu BUT ONLY THROUGH THE STUDENT'S COCC MAIL ACCOUNT, NOT BY PERSONAL EMAIL. Please save a file as a doc or docx and attach to the mail.*
